3. REVIEW OF THE CITY OF COSTA MESA URBAN CANOPY AND LAND ASSESSMENT

Mr. Robert Ryan, Maintenance Services Manager presented.

Public Comment:

Eric: Thanked the City and Commissioner Garcia Arcos for supporting youth programming in District Four, he cited research on the civic, health, and safety benefits of urban trees and urged the City to pilot a green equity program in District Four by prioritizing tree planting in rights-of-way and reclassifying limited impervious land using grant funding and community partnerships.

David Martinez: Found the canopy assessment informative, he recommended adding detailed, publicly accessible maps showing existing canopy and potential planting areas to better evaluate tree needs at specific sites and future developments.

Chair Brown encouraged commissioners to frame their questions and recommendations through the lens of the Commission's values document, noting this as an opportunity to reflect on the document's practical use.

Commissioner Leger advocated for closer collaboration with the school district to prioritize tree planting over shade structures, suggested using underutilized school grounds for trees, and proposed involving students and families in community planting efforts.

Commissioner Komala asked clarifying questions about trees rated in poor condition, whether those conditions, preventions, and partnerships with private properties to meet canopy goals.

Commissioner Dorn Parker called for courageous, intentional planning around tree species selection, wildfire risk, and water use, and proposed strategic collaborations with schools, water providers, private property owners, and a reevaluation of golf course land to significantly expand canopy and green space.

Commissioner Husen thanked staff for the presentation and inquired whether the city had previously established canopy goals, how the city planned to increase canopy from current levels, and what past or existing tree-planting programs could inform future efforts.

Commissioner Garcia Arcos supported investing in more detailed canopy mapping, asked about Arbor Day and tree-planting seasons, and spoke about the importance of mulching to improve tree survival.

Vice Chair Wright praised the canopy assessment as a strong data foundation and encouraged translating it into a strategic, CIP-driven approach, with enhanced and user-friendly maps focused on major corridors, pedestrian opportunity zones, and high-need neighborhoods to guide equitable investment and future Council action.

Chair Brown proposed consolidating commissioner suggestions into recommendations for Council, raised questions about equity and public-health outcomes related to tree canopy distribution, highlighted concerns about low canopy coverage at public schools, and emphasized prioritizing high-density, underserved districts while better understanding how large park areas affect district-level canopy data. Also inquired how District Five's tree canopy statistics would change if Fairview Park were excluded, expressed interest in concepts such as urban forest bathing, and emphasized the need to align mapping, outreach, and equity-focused priorities into clear, actionable recommendations.

Commissioner Leger stressed the importance of budgeting and suggested partnerships with local businesses to "adopt a tree," highlighted health and safety benefits of trees, including air quality and traffic safety, and urged evaluation of where trees have been removed without replacement.

Vice Chair Wright proposed leveraging existing interagency liaison meetings to advance collaboration with schools and water districts, and emphasized prioritizing low-canopy, low-opportunity areas through equity-driven strategies that may require greater creativity and investment. Emphasized the Commission's local knowledge of neighborhoods and recommended formally supporting a dedicated maintenance plan and budget to preserve and sustain the existing assessment.

Commissioner Dorn Parker cited research demonstrating health benefits of green space, highlighted the need to address tree loss on private property through incentive-based programs, and advocated for collaborations with private owners and water districts to reimagine and expand tree planting in currently unsuitable areas.

Commissioner Garcia Arcos questioned how water-resistant land could be reclassified to support tree planting, supported developing detailed maps to identify underserved areas, and recommended launching a pilot program in high-need districts while pursuing available grants and external resources to expand canopy coverage.

Commissioner Garcia Arcos emphasized the success of community forestry efforts in District Four, highlighting high tree survival rates due to resident stewardship, and urged greater attention to mulching—particularly in underserved areas—while encouraging replication of successful tree and fruit tree planting models citywide.
