Absent: None

ANNOUNCEMENTS AND PRESENTATIONS: None.

PUBLIC COMMENTS - MATTERS NOT LISTED ON THE AGENDA:

Jay Humphrey, thanked City staff for their continued work on the Fairview Park Master Plan Update, stating that it is a strong document that will guide the park's preservation for future generations. He also extended holiday well-wishes to the Commission, wishing them a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, and said he looks forward to seeing them again after the new year.

PLANNING COMMISSIONER COMMENTS AND SUGGESTIONS:

Commissioner Martinez announced that the Costa Mesa Sanitary District is accepting applications for its Citizens Advisory Committee and encouraged interested residents to apply. He also highlighted the return of the Snoopy House holiday event, noting it begins Friday evening and includes decorations, Santa, food, and performances. Additionally, he raised concerns about outdated City Council policies. Such as, procedures for General Plan amendments, FAR deviations, and the requirement for the Planning Commission to review and make recommendations on changes to the Fairview Park Master Plan. He noted that, under current policy, the Planning Commission may be seeing the Fairview Park Master Plan again unless Council policies are updated.

Commissioner Dickson encouraged residents to stay engaged by watching and participating in City Council and Planning Commission meetings, noting that doing so helps people better understand the city, their neighbors, and how decisions are made. He emphasized the importance of civic involvement despite low online viewership. He also commended Commissioner Martinez for his comments on the Fairview Park Master Plan update, particularly regarding the need for consistency with the General Plan and related documents like the Bike Plan and Active Transportation Plan. Commissioner Dickson expressed support for the Fairview Park Master Plan returning to the Planning Commission and reiterated its importance.

Commissioner Andrade expressed appreciation for City staff and her fellow Commissioners and extended holiday wishes to everyone, encouraging a season filled with gratitude.

Vice Chair Zich requested a brief discussion on Item Consent Calendar item No. 1, the unofficial meeting minutes from November 10, 2025. Motion Discussion:

Commissioners discussed a City initiated proposal to streamline small lot and two-unit split projects through a ministerial approval process, with some members strongly supporting the effort to speed housing production while ensuring compliance with state law and protection of any protected units. Supporters emphasized that small lot splits have historically been noncontroversial, make up a significant share of new housing, and could benefit from faster processing and potentially reduced fees. Opposing commissioners, however, argued that the change would improperly eliminate public notice, hearings, staff reports, and appeal rights, reducing transparency and public participation. They criticized reliance on SB 9, expressed concern about cutting the public out of local land-use decisions, and stated that the current process is not burdensome enough to justify ministerial approval. Both opposing commissioners concluded they could not support the proposal, urging City Council to consider alternative approaches that preserve public involvement.

NEW BUSINESS:

1. HOUSING ELEMENT IMPLEMENTATION (NEIGHBORHOODS WHERE WE ALL BELONG) PUBLIC ENGAGEMENT UPDATE

Presentation by Senior Planner, Michelle Halligan and Cathy Tang Saez, Dudek.

Staff explained the study session was mainly to describe the proposed approach to rezoning Housing Element sites by creating a new section of the Mixed-Use Overlay District and invite general feedback. Staff described a new law that exempts most actions to implement housing elements from CEQA. The new law, SB 131, would likely allow the City to expedite the rezoning of Housing Element sites. Detailed amendments (including Zoning Code changes) would be presented to the Planning Commission in February. Commissioners then asked questions on key issues like whether Housing Element site property owners can opt out of residential and mixed-use standards (they can't without withdrawing from the Housing Element), what outreach was done, why Costa Mesa's buffer assumptions are higher than in other cities, and how "by-right" rules, affordability percentages, density caps, and how "no net loss" would work if sites don't build out as assumed. There was also a long back-and-forth about "sunsetting" urban plans and specific plans—staff said while the PDF urban plans be sunset, many rules must be carried into the Zoning Code because Measure Y limits changes on non-Measure K sites, and some areas are especially complex to untangle without creating nonconforming uses. Commissioners asked for clear mapping of what regulations would apply where, strong incentives (especially for deeper affordability), reduced parking mandates to lower costs and traffic, better integration with circulation/active transportation, and a practical "plan B" if the overlay approach is challenged—staff said the overlay strategy is being prepared with HCD input and provisions may adjust based on HCD guidance/case law.

Public comments:

Jay Humphrey questioned why the Measure K property list was provided only by parcel numbers rather than including street addresses, noting that this makes it difficult for the public to understand which properties are affected and suggesting the City provide both parcel numbers and addresses for clarity. He also discussed past General Plan allowances that could have supported significant housing growth without voter measures, citing a successful pre-Measure Y project as an example of for-sale housing built without a public vote. He expressed concern that current policies and in-lieu affordable housing fees incentivize market-rate rentals over homeownership. He concluded by thanking the Commission for their work and wishing everyone a happy holiday season.

Richard Huffman stated that the agenda report does a good job explaining a complex process and represents a step in the right direction, though it has some gaps. They discussed the Mixed-Use Overlay District approach, noting that while the Housing Element proposes higher-density residential zoning through overlays and specific plans, the Measure K map applies only to non-residential portions of existing overlays. As a result, some new high-density areas in existing residential zones would still require voter approval under Measure Y, which the speaker viewed positively to ensure informed community consensus. The speaker also raised concerns about the lack of discussion regarding traffic and the Circulation Element, questioned how increased housing density would be accommodated, and suggested that voter-approved rezonings, such as potential residential use in the airport area, could be a viable and appropriate approach if supported by effective outreach and planning.

Cynthia McDonald raised concerns about the Notice of Preparation process, arguing that the short timeline limits meaningful public participation and transparency. She stated that the City is planning far beyond its RHNA requirement by rezoning for over 21,500 housing units and significant commercial development, despite acknowledging major environmental and infrastructure impacts, particularly to transportation, which she noted will not be fully addressed. She criticized Measure K for allowing broad land use changes with limited community oversight, questioned the City's housing approach as exclusionary rather than inclusionary, and said public outreach has been inadequate and unclear. She also emphasized that promised visioning under Measure K has not occurred and requested that Planning Commission presentations be posted online to comply with the Brown Act and ensure the public has equal access to information.
